No not the sticky, sweet, fruity, ice-able wine your aunt brings to the party every time (even when you tell her not to). Ask any sommelier about their favorite grape, and the one you'll hear over and over again is Riesling. Lean, mean, acid bombs like these are the reason for such a cultish following in the wino world.

Introduced to California during the Gold Rush, we later shipped these hearty grapes east during Prohibition for home winemaking. Modern Zinfandel has garnered further infamy for its high alcohol content and fruit-driven styles. However, with a careful hand, they can be bright, fresh, spicy, and extremely food-friendly, too. We leave it to the vintners to craft these mysterious old vines to their liking.

The lovechild of Cabernet Franc and Sauvignon Blanc, this one is a total rockstar. In 1976, a California Cabernet Sauvignon won against the best of Bordeaux's Grand Crus during a blind tasting. The Judgment of Paris put California on the winemaking map and reversed centuries of upturned noses.

This elegant, sexy, and highly underrated grape suffered a loss in popularity over the last few decades, partially due to the movie Sideways (I'm not drinking fin' Merlot!), but more due to the shadow of its more famous, jock of a brother Cabernet Sauvignon. These days, Merlot is back and better than ever with a new generation of winemakers and growers showing what this grape can really do.
